Media Interest into Specific Language Impairment

February 2011

Speech and Language Impairment is receiving a lot of interest and attention at the moment, partly due to the film The King's Speech, and partly because 2011 is the 'National Year of Communication' for which the special Hello Campaign is intended to make communication a priority for all children and young people.

Moor House School has contributed to the discussion and been featured in a number of news articles, with representatives from the school appearing in radio as well as television interviews. The school's first patron was in fact H.M. Queen Elizabeth The Queen Mother, wife of King George VI.

Luke, in Year 11, was recently featured in a BBC Radio segment about SLI, with additional comments from Lisa Campbell (Speech and Language Therapy) and Alan Bathe (Head of Education). Click here to listen to this interview!

Also, a group of students were interviewed by a BBC reporter and this was shown in a segment on BBC South East News on Monday 24th January at 6.30pm.
